NEW BOOKS.

New Publi The "Letters of Samuel Johnson, LL D. Collected and Edited by George Birkbeck Hill" (Harper & Brothers) consists of two handsome octave volumes, uniform with the same editor's six-volume edition of Boswell's Life of Johnson, to which it may be regarded as a supple-ment. Mr. Hill has taken as the basis of his ork the letters of Johnson published by Mrs. Piozzi in the two volumes of her correspondeace with him, which she compiled shortly after his death, enriching them with the addition of as many more derived from other sources, some of them being autographs never before printed. The letters found in Boswell's biography are also included in the series. though they are only referred to, and not reprinted in full. Altogether the collection comprises over a thousand letters, and is as complete as it is possible to make it. Its value is greatly enhanced by an abundance of explanatory notes, clucidating passages which would often be unintelligible without them. The first of the new letters, which the editor calls the gem of his collection, is one written by Johnson to his wife three years after their marriage, in 1730, when he was 30 and she was 51. A fac-simile of it is profixed to the first volume. This letter exhibits the same affectionate tenderness toward his wife which Johnson, notwithstanding their disparity in age, cherished for her during her life, and for her memory until his own death. He calls her his "dear girl," promises to send her twenty pounds to pay for surgical attention to a hurt she had received, and deplores the cruel necessity of being deprived of her company. Following this letter are a number to booksellers and others upon business matters, which are valuable chiefly as showing the pecuniary difficulties under which Johnson labored during his early career. Twice he begs of Mr. Newbery the favor of the loan of a guinea, and once one of two guineas. At another time he speaks of being arrested for a debt of five pounds eighteen shillings. Other letters are full of talk about his work and of payment for it. These dreary details are relieved by six letters to Miss Hill Boothby. of whom he once told Mrs. Thrale, that "such was the purity of her mind and such the traces of her manner that Lord Lyttelton and he used to strive for her preference with an emulation that occasioned hourly disgust and ended in lasting animosity." They seem to have been written on the occasion of a dangerous illness of Miss Boothby, and present a curious mixture of affection, religion, and medical advice. The letters to his stepdaughter, Miss Lucy Porter, furnish considerable new information about Johnson's family relations. Others to his learned acquaintances and personal friends are full of characteristic touches. But, after all, the letters to Mrs. Thvals, afterward Mrs. Piozzi. are, notwithstanding their want of novelty. more interesting and valuable than all the others. It is a curious fact, which has escaped Mr. Hill's notice, that although Mrs. Piozzi received £500 from an enterprising bookseller for the copyright of her work, it never reached assecond edition, and has long been out of print. The reproduction of its most important contents is, therefore, a real service to the public. Nowhere, except perhaps in his talk, as Bos-Well records it, dons Johnson appear to so much advantage. He had for Mrs. Thrale an affection which he displayed in a zealous and chivalrous devotion to herself, her husband, and her children, and which led him to write to her, in spite of his indolence, altogether, at different times, 300 letters. During nine weeks of the year 1775, the tenth of their acquaintance, he wrote to her thirty times. He opens his heart to her, tells her all about his sicknesses, their symptoms, the remedies be employs, and his progress toward recovery. and in turn, he inquires anxiously about her own health and that of her husband and children, counsels with her, about the management of her household, and relates, in a sprightly and humorous manner, all the news and gossip that would be likely to amuse her. without the slightest trace of sentimentality or of amorous passion. Toward the close of the correspondence his constitutional melancholy becomes predominant, as if he had a premonition of the catastrophe of her marriage with Plozzi, which was destined to put own death. If Mr. Hill had done nothing more than reprint and annotate these letters he would have deserved our thanks, and with the additions he has made to them he has produced a work indispensable to every student of English literature. Davis is published under the title of "Van Bibber and Others" (Harper & Brothers). As was the case with Mr. Davis's previous book of stories, their merit is not uniform. The last in the book. "An Unfinished Story," is an ingenious and interesting place of work. A number of the others are marked by both vigor and offect, but the vigor is sometimes insufficiently regulated and the effect is not always of a kind that is desirable. The character ealled Van Bibber is still otherwise peculiar. He suffers from the twofold disadvantage of being an unduly free conception of an origi-nally bal imitation. He is Mr. Davis's idealization of the New York variety of the British swell, and, so far as we can see, he is not exactly worth while. Behind the scenes at the theatre, providing a tramp with an unnecesmary breakfast, betting on the races, or lecturing his proposterous English man servant at Deimonico's, he is not in any circumstances recognizable, and if he interests us at all it is ecause he is so strictly different from anything that is a fact or that we should wish to be a fact. The story relating the process by which Van Bibber reastablishes friendly relations between a Fifth avenue father and his five-yearold child, who has just been launched upon the pathetic uncertainties of a comic opera actress's career, conveys something of the conglomerate impression that we should expect to derive from the perusal of a chapter in a Deleartean primer and from the observation of a stereopticon entertainment conducted by a tailor. For a number of pages it is a sort of succession of voiceless poses with a strong sentiment of carefully selected clothes. There is, indeed, some conversation further on, including a last remark by the child's father which constitutes the finishing stroke of quiet pathes in the tale. The father lives in o Perkeley flats in Fifth avenue, and also has an English valet, and is, moreover, a man who, even i.; a "for nless dressing gown," has "the look and the confident bearing of a gentle-ma", or, at, least, of a man of the world." It is midnight, and the father is in the Berkeley flats and in the formless dressing gown. The reconciliation has been effected. The five-year-old actress is asleed on the sofa. The unsuspecting British valet is called in, and his smootlens may be fancied as his master says to him: "James, you can make up a place for me here on the lounge. Miss Caruthers, my daughter, will aleep in my room to-night." We have a certain understanding of the emotional habit of the British valet, derived largely from the pages of Mr. Thackeray, and we know, according to this understanding, what this valet said to himself as he carried Miss Caruthers away.

"Roweny in Boston," a novel by Maria Louise Pool (Harper & Brothers), is a surprisingly good story. The plot is very simple. Rowena s a pretty and elever country girl, who goes to Boston to learn how to paint pictures, and who meets in the city with various entirely reasonable experiences which the tale re-cords. It is something to be remarked when a writer can take as a theme the perfectly or-dinary phease of familiar every-day living, and so treat them that they shall be alive with interest, refraining at the same time from all violence to the realities, as has been done here. We call this a perfect essay in realism. As to the reason why, with its remarkable truth, no dulness has crept into it, there can be no doubt that the reason lies in its even more remarkable humor. It is persistently and irresistibly droll, and it knows as well how to get amusement out of a Browning club as t of a Hudson street boarding house or a village dressmaker who fills her mouth with pins. It is a very delicately drawn story in all particulars. It is sensitive in the matter of ideas and of phrase. Its characters make a delightful company. It is excellent art and rare entertainment. "Grania; the Story of an Island." by the Hon. Emily Lawless (Macmillan & Co.), is a very poetical and a very sad tale, rehearsing the sorrows and the death of two sisters who dwelt on one of the islands of Aran in Galway Bay. One of the sisters, Grania, is fitted by nature to enjoy life. She has health and beauty, and might have her pick of lovers, but her choice is a drunkard, and after a period of great unhappiness she is drowned while on her way in a fog to bring a priest to attend upon her dying sister, a victim of consumption-It is a narrative of unbroken melancholy, wel told, and just the thing for those in search of something to counteract the overpowering hilariousness of ordinary existence.

There is plenty of imagination and of forei-ble description in the opening part of "The Soul of Lilith," a novel by Marie Corelli (Lovell, Coryell & Co.). It is sufficient to make the reader wonder, and among other things he wonders how it is to be maintained, and, further, to be made to rise to a still superior climax. It is hardly a surprise to find that it s not maintained—that the pitch has been too high to be carried through forty chapters This is the story of a dark-faced Oriental with snow-white hair, who is seeking in London to penetrate the profoundest mysteries of the universe. He has in an upper chamber of his nouse an Arabian girl who is really dead, but whom he has preserved in the semblance of life for a period of six years by means of an elixir derived from electricity. She is Lilith, and he sends her soul daily on journeys into the remotenesses of space in quest of the fact of death, but she never can find it. Herconstant report is that there is only life, and to emphasize the idea of immortality is perhaps the main purpose of the story. But the tale develops a great variety of incidents of strange and amazing character, and its interest lies in these, we suspect, rather than in its underlying philosophy. Among other things there is an astronomer, who lives in a tower on the seacoast, and who has in his tower a crystal disk which revolves perpet-ually of its own inherent forces and chronicles the waverings of star beams. The tower eventually is split in twain and the astronomer is killed by a thunderbolt, and the body of Lilith falls away into an impalpable powder when its master forgets himself and essays to make love to it; and the intellect of the Oriental is palsied, so that he is content to sit for hours together under the trees in a monastery garden, stroking the feathers of doves. The is strong work in the book, but, as said, its interest is not maintained.

"A Day at Laguerre's and Other Days" is the title of a series of nine sketches by Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.). These are very gracefully written and very charming sketches. "A Day at Laguerre's" is an account of a French restaurant on the Bronx River, and others of the sketches carry us to Venice, to Constantinople, to Cordova. and to other places remote and picturesque. The publishers have made an odd and at-tractive showing in their part of the work. They have given us a sightly book, and the contents is full of flavor.

"That Angelie Woman," by the Rev. Dr. James M. Ludlow (Harper & Brothers), is the story of a young New Yorker who inherits a fortune, encounters the perils of drink and of the affections, and comes out on his feet finally, It is a smoothly told story, varied in incident and agreeable to read.

"The Great Leaders of a Brave Poople," an account of the Irish movement for self-gov-ernment, by Robert F. Walsh, together with an account of O'Connell and of important events in Irish history, by Thomas Clarke Luby, an illustrated volume, is published by Gny Brothers & Co.

"The Mother of King's Children; a Story of Church Blessings Through Christian En-deavor," by J. F. Cowan, is published by homas Y. Crowell & Co.

THE GRANT MONUMENT.

Gen, Porter Issues Another Address to the Committeemen Collecting Funds.

Yesterday the pupils in the first grammar grades of the public schools prepared their essays on Gen. U. S. Grant, for the best of which the Monument Association has offered cash prizes. The essays were all written in the class rooms under the supervision of the principal. Under the instructions of President Hunt of the Board of Education the principal and his first assistants are to act as a committee for the examination of the essays. The three which seem to possess the greater merit in each class are to be sent to President Hunt before next Wednesday afternoon. There is a prize of $20 for the best, and $10 for the second best original essay. Another convention of the chairmen of the 215 committees engaged in obtaining sub-

Another convention of the chairmen of the 215 committees engaged in obtaining subscriptions for the monument fund will be held in a few days. This address was issued yesterday to the committeemen to spur every one to aid the fund:

"The work of the first four weeks of the present organization for completing the building fund resulted in subscriptions amounting to over $200,000. This leaves about $150,000 yet to he raised. The result thus far is exceedingly encouraging. The impetus given to the movement by the impressive ceremonies at the laying of the corner stone on the 27th inst. and the increased interest manifested in the work since that time, afford a good opportunity for the rapid completion of the fund. Success or failure now depends entirely upon the active and intolligent efforts of the members of the committees. There are at present 215 committees, numbering over 2,400 persons. Let us strike while the irou is bot.

"It is found that large numbers of persons in many trades have not yet been personally approached. Experience has shown that appeals by means of circulars have produced little result, and that it is essential that parties be communicated with personally in order that indifference and objections may be overcome; for while the importance of the subject is clear to your mind it may not be to the minds of others. We know that the struggle to achieve success makes demands upon your time, but the cause is worthy of the sacrifice. The more indifference and lack of public spirit ensuantered, the more need there is of increased activity and earnestness.

"The press and the public are engerly awaiting the final result of the work of the committees now in the field. To such of you as are preparing to turn in your subscription books, it is suggested that you first call a meeting of your subscribers and see whether they will not increase to some extent their own subscriptions and also assist in obtaining others. A trade should not do injustice to itself by going on record with an unreasonably small amou you keep in close communication who have so clation, and call freely for any information or assistance.

"We find it to be the universal opinion that the fund can be raised much more easily in the next theiry days than in a longer time. In another month the inactive season of hot weather will set in. We cannot be expected to devote our time to the active prosecution of this work beyond that date. We must make this campaign short and decisive, Let us resolve that next Decoration Day, May 30, 1892, shall mark the successful termination of our labors. On that day there will be imposing ceremonies at the tomb of Gen. Grant, participated in by civic and military organizations, and the arrangements give promise that the demonstration will be as impressive as that of the laying of the corner stone. This occasion will prove a fitting climax to our labors. An announcement at that time that the entire fund has been raised will entitle you to the evertasting gratitude of your fellow citizens of New York and of the nation.

"Horace Porree, President."

ON THE PLANTATION. By JOEL CHANDLES HARRIS. With 23 Illustrations by E. W. KEMULE, and Portrait of the Author. 12mo. Cloth. $1,50.

By the Author of " Uncle Remus."

The most personal and in some respects the most important work which Mr. Harris has published since "Uncle Remus." Many will read between the lines and see the autobiography of the author. In addition to the stirring incidents which appear in the story, the author presents a graphto picture of certain phases of Southern life which have not appeared in his books before. There are also new examples of the folk-inte of the negroes, which became classic when presented to the public in the pages of "Uncle Remus."

"Those who never tire of Uncle Remus and his stories—with whom we would be accounted—will delight in Joe Maxwell and his exploits."—London Surveiley Reviee.

"The story is well told throughout, and is certain to rank among Mr. Harris's best works. To say the least, it is the most interesting literationand, Vo., Time. ture of the kind recently published -Richard

TRANSPOSÉS EN HARMONIES DE COULSURS

AVIS DES EDITEURS.

Le titre, sous lequel nous présentons aux amuteurs cette série de singt desens de l'aul Renouard, demande un mot d'amplication. La responsibilité esthétique que la publication de a ourrage entraîne est partigle entre l'artiste et les éditeurs. L'artiste nous a exécuté une suite de demins en note et liane que nous arons transposés, pour ainsi dire, en harmonies de coleura Dans cette transformation chromatique, nous arens cherchs à exprimer des souvenirs de l'éclairage spécial du théâtre et des salles de classe de l'Opéra; ou bien, empruntant une suggestion de coloration aux fleurs ou aux joyaux, nous avons compast des harmonice tout simplement pour le plaieir des veux. Cependant ces harmonies ne sont pas absolument de fantaiele; elles son basées sur l'observation de certains phénomènes que la seisnes optique a constitée; et elles sont reproductibles dans le domaine matériel par un effort de la volonté. Notre vision personnelle nous a portes à faire cet essai de transposition chromatique dans des colorations délicates qui de mandent à être rure à la lumière du jour, la Ancese des tons ne powant s'apprécier qu'à la lumtère blanche.

Nous osons espérer que les beaux et nerveux dessins de Paul Rene ward, d'une charrostion el spirituelle, et d'un rendu el prate et el juste, nous tandront l'aput des senateurs cultirés pour la tente tive d'Innovation dans l'estampe en coleurs que nous commençons tel et que nous espérons continuer prochainement avec le conome de quelques uns des entoristes les plus personnels de notre époque L'aspect moderne et imprévu de la série actuelle ralifera a peut-ètre à cette nouvelle esthétique les yeux raffinés et subtile qui demandent à voir autre chuse que la terne monotonie des factinalies ou la convention des colorations ordinaless.

Letters of Samuel Johnson, LLD.

Collected and Edited by GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., Pembroke College, Oxford; Editor of Boswell's "Life of Johnson." With a fac-simile letter. 2 vols. 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $7 50. (In a box.)

This collection of letters, although not in-cluding any that are found in Boswell's "Life." is the most complete yet published. The letters show, as no other publication has done. how admirable Dr. Johnson was in his correspondence. In matter and manner they exhibit a delightful variety-those fine, weighty passages worthy of a philosopher. that strong common sense so characteristic of the man, that vigorous English of which he was master, and in some instances a playfulness and lightness of touch which will surprise those who know their author only by his formal writings.

A Voyage of Discovery.

A Novel of American Society. By HAMILTON AIDE. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1 25.

Mr. Aidé, during his recent tour in this country in company with Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Stanley, had exceptional opportunities for becoming acquainted with the characteristic peculiarities of social life and manners in America, and he has embodied in this enter-taining volume many of the impressions received at that time. In a delightful story, in which love and intrigue have their part, he has skilfully interwoven an Englishman's views of society as it exists in New York, Boston, Chicago, and the far West. Several prominent and well-known leaders of fashion in New York are said to be represented among the characters of the story.

The Technique of Rest.

By Anna C. Brackett. Small 16mo. Cloth, Ornamental, 75 cents.

A recent article in HARPER'S MAGAZINE, Written by Miss Brackett for the purpose of helping women who are tired, was the occasion of so many letters of thanks and appreciation from those who had evidently been benefited by it, that it was suggested that more might e said on the same subject. The result was the present attractive little volume, which is emmended not only to tired women, but to all busy workers who feel that the amount of nervous force at their disposal is in danger of being overtaxed.
